How do you define “global equity” or “justice”?

I define global equity as fairness for all and the assurance of equity without fear. I think justice should be given to people of all colors, religions, routes, and ages with no discrimination of rights.

What international or intercultural programs have you participated in?

The intercultural experience with Scottsdale Community College gave me a broader understanding and knowledge about the other culture. It expands my thoughts into different cultures without barriers. Furthermore, it opens the space for me to ask more out-of-the-box questions without hesitation, which will help me return to my country where women continue to get the same rights as men and help me achieve equilibrium.

How has your perspective of global equity and justice challenged or informed by these experiences?

These experiences informed my perspective of global equity and justice because I begin a discussion with an open mind knowing my rights before I start any new forum.

What skills have you gained from your global education experience?

The skills I have gained from my global education experience are: Critical thinking, imagination, collaboration across networks, effective oral and written communication, and adaptability.

How do you think you will apply these in your future (or current) career?

I believe these skills will help me to be more structured and to understand my rights without the need for a third party to help me.
