How do you define “global equity” or “justice”?

I’m coming to believe that justice is a highly contested subject. For crime incidents, one side may feel justified in the corrective action taken against somebody, while someone else may feel unjustified because they do not agree with the corrective action being taken. I don’t believe we’ll ever find a happy medium for justice.

What international programs or projects have you participated in as part of your professional or academic career?

I was fortunate to have had the experience of studying abroad in Ireland in 2018.

What skills have you gained from your global education experience(s)?

The skills I learned while studying abroad consisted of learning boundaries for myself and learning to appreciate each person for who they are authentically. Regardless of how different someone was from me or if they did things I disagreed with, I learned to respect and appreciate them.

How do you think you will apply these in your future (or current) career?

I have been applying these skills in my personal and professional life since my trip. It has helped me tremendously, as I am able to work better with people and can socialize with a wider variety of people now.

Do you have any plans for future participation in international or intercultural programs?

I don’t have plans for future international education related programs right now, but I do plan to take a two-year world trip to visit all the students I met in SCC’s Community College Initiative program.
